Battlefield 3: Close Combat will have new maps and units Electronic Arts announced a lot of new Battlefield 3 content today, with one of the biggest announcements being the existence of close combat. Battlefield 3: Close Combat will be a new DLC feature for the game allowing players to get up close and personal with their enemies and take them out using all of Battlefield 3's impressive arsenal of weapons. Other additions include four new maps that bring the map count up to seven, an on-map telegraph system that is integrated into the game, a swarm system that brings the game's best mechanic to life, a new field of fire indicator and a brand new air unit that has players engaging and defeating enemy paratroopers and gunners from close range. All of these new features are available right now and it sounds like a lot. The future Games like Battlefield 3 are typically supported with updates for a long time, but the Battlefield 3 team is still looking into the future and they have confirmed that they will be bringing a new Battlefield 3 expansion to the game before the end of 2014. Other than that, nothing has been confirmed and Battlefield 3 itself is going strong at the moment as the latest FPS is still one of the most popular games on the market with new content coming at an almost furious pace. [Source] 2 thoughts on "Battlefield 3: Close Combat will have new maps and units" Battlefield 3 should go with " Close Combat " rather than Battlefield 3: Close Combat. Given that it will offer a new feature, they shouldn't re-name the game by adding ": Close Combat." Posting Permissions PlayStation Universe Copyright 2006-2014 7578768 Canada Inc.
